

PETER STONE BROWN

November 17, 1997

Hi,

How are you doing? I hope the transition to new job, new apartment, new life is working out. I'm sure you're thrilled to have your own place again as well as all your possessions back and I'm sure you've been busy unpacking, setting up and dealing with all of it.

I've been busy strategizing for Dylan tickets, something I haven't had to do in ages. I will be seeing him with Van at MSG--actually managed to get through on phone. He's also playing the Troc (ugh) for 2 nights.

Haven't seen the lunatic since he got back. Haven't wanted to. He came over last night, I pretended I wasn't home. He said he'd be in the neighborhood and would stop by. I was watching the X-files and didn't want to be interrupted, so I turned off all the lights and ignored the doorbell. It got worse after you left and the moron didn't even make it back in time to see Ray Davies at the Factory which he had tickets for. The calls (at all hours) continued. It got so bad that Tom Heyman (of Go To Blazes) called me up about it and he actually called TG's parents. TG has been more normal on the phone since he got back, but given what happened the last month, I of course can not trust that. In addition to his manic highs and lows, I think he's a pretty good actor and can use his various moods to get what he wants out of people.

He just moved out of his parents house and into someone's apartment in Center City. I'm sure he'll get shitloads of parking tickets and have his car towed. The funniest thing is the first week he was back or maybe it was the second, his father backed into his car and really fucked it up. I'm sure it was on-purpose if not consciously, then sub-consciously. TG of course was really pissed off in that nasty way he has now when he feels he has been wronged.

I hardly have any gigs at the moment and I'm not really trying hard to get any. Just sick of making long distance calls which I can't afford to people who never call back. I may have someone finally to help me, but I'm not counting on it. Trying to figure out some other way to make things happen (been leaning on my lawyer to make some contacts). Evidently, something is happening with the album in Italy, so who knows?

Gotta go take care of some stuff, so that's it for now. Hope you get back on-line soon. Miss your e-mails.

Love,
